The two High Court cases that this book explores - Koowarta v Bjelke-Petersen (1982) and the Tasmanian Dams case (1983) - are famous legally as they marked a decisive reckoning by the Court with both international law and federal constitutionalism. Yet these cases also offer a significant marker of Australia in the 1980s: a shift to a different form of political engagement, nationally and internationally, on complex questions about race and the environment.

Abstract. This article introduces the writings of jurists, lawyers, scholars and activists who were invited to review and remember the 1982 High Court decision Koowarta v Bjelke-Petersen ('Koowarta'). The judgment is important doctrinally and is often cited on the legal record. What is less familiar is how Koowarta is also a public trial, an event of law that carries many different accounts of how jurisprudence is experienced in the life of a community.
